

Levar Fisher

Corporate Introduction

Levar Fisher is an awarded college athlete who became a successful pro, captaining not one – but two NFL teams, and later taking that leadership role to the stage as a sought-after motivational speaker. His amazing story has inspired audience’s nationwide—receiving praise from notables like author and speaker, Les Brown and Florida State Football Coach, Chuck Amato.

Recruited by the NC State University Wolfpack in 1998, Levar made 1st team All-ACC selection in 1999, claiming that honor again in 2000 and 2001, as well as ACC’s Defensive Player of the year. Levar was also a Consensus 1st team All American Football player at N. C. State in 2000 and 2001 and achieving his greatest honor as an Academic All American. He was a Butkus Semi Finalist for Best Linebacker in the Country 2000 and 2001, and a 2000 Nagurski Finalist for Best Defensive Player in the Country. You don’t become that good as a linebacker without a few tackles (try 492 for a career), and when you are really competitive, you lead the nation in tackles per game with (15.1, 166 for the year). In 2002, the star Wolfpacker was drafted by the Arizona Cardinals - 17th slot of the second round. In 2006, Levar joined the New Orleans Saints, where his NFL career ended with a devastating knee injury.

For the last few years, Levar has been bringing his “A” game to schools, locker rooms, and conference centers across the country, helping listeners to utilize their mistakes and become more than a pro.

A native North Carolinian, Levar and his family make their home in Chicago, where they manage his speaking and event firm, as well as a youth-supporting foundation called Fisher of Men.

With great anticipation, we are happy to introduce to you Levar Fisher.
